Hiring Team — Strategic Finance

Re: Head of GTM Finance

Dear Hiring Team,

Your posting asks for someone who builds the model from a blank page, questions every input, and turns the analysis into a decision. That is how I work, and I would like to bring it to Harvey's revenue engine.

I will be direct about the gap first. I have not run sales finance at a software company, and I have not owned an ARR or quota model. If that experience is the binding requirement, I understand. What I bring is the discipline underneath it, proven at a scale few GTM teams will ever see.

I build forecasts and challenge them. At JPMorgan Chase I led CCAR forecast validation over a $2.6 trillion balance sheet, where every assumption had to survive the Federal Reserve. As a Capital Controller I analysed risk-weighted asset treatment across a $50 billion book and took $180 million of capital optimisation to the CFO as a decision, not a spreadsheet. I automated reconciliations that removed about 40% of manual review, because a forecast is only as good as the data under it, the same reason your posting calls out CRM integrity.

I think in unit economics because I run a business on them. Since 2010 I have built and run a residential and multifamily real estate portfolio. Every acquisition is underwritten on acquisition cost, payback, cash yield and contribution after operating cost, and every hold-or-sell decision comes from those numbers. CAC, payback and contribution margin by segment are the same questions asked about customers instead of buildings.

I know your buyer. I spent five years as a Vice President in Citi's Internal Audit function, reporting to the Board Audit Committee, and I built and shipped an AI tool that cut review cycle time by about 35%. Professional-services buyers evaluate AI on defensibility as much as productivity. I can help GTM leadership price and structure deals, including non-standard terms, with that buyer's view of risk in mind.

I pull my own data in SQL, I explain conclusions in plain language, and I move quickly. I would welcome a conversation about what Harvey's GTM finance function needs in its next year.

Sincerely,

Yasir A. Malik
