Re: Vice President, Treasury, Liquidity and Resolution Planning

Dear Hiring Team,

I spent six years at JPMorgan: as a Program Manager for the Commercial & Investment Bank's resolution planning, as a Capital Controller in Basel Measurement & Analytics, and as a Risk Control Manager in Treasury & CIO. I would like to come back to Treasury, where that combination of planning, capital and controls is used every day.

I know resolution and recovery planning from the inside. I ran it across 50+ stakeholders in Finance, Treasury, Legal, Operations and Technology, none of whom reported to me, and delivered 165(d) submissions to the Federal Reserve and FDIC on statutory deadlines. That meant turning strategy into data, documentation and governance that a regulator would accept.

I work with forecasts and challenge them. I led CCAR forecast validation over a $2.6 trillion balance sheet, owned first-line controls over Treasury and CIO capital and liquidity activities, and automated reconciliations that cut manual review by about 40%. As a Capital Controller I analysed RWA treatment across a $50 billion book and found $180 million of capital optimisation for the CFO.

I make the data defensible. At Citi I consolidated more than 500 legal-entity data sources under ownership, lineage and quality controls, and later spent five years in Internal Audit making control evidence regulator-ready. Modernising forecasting and reporting only works if the data underneath can be traced and trusted.

I would welcome a conversation about your Treasury and planning priorities.

Sincerely,

Yasir A. Malik
